UNITED STATES' MOTION TO INTERVENE

Pursuant to Rule 24 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, the United States of America respectfully moves to intervene as a plaintiff in the instant litigation. Plaintiffs in these consolidated cases seek relief against the State of Texas under several statutory provisions enforced and administered by the Attorney General of the United States, most notably Section 3(c) of the Voting Rights Act, 42 U.S.C. § 1973a(c). Where the government's claims raise legal questions that are already at issue in pending litigation, timely intervention by the Attorney General should be permitted. Cf. Miami Health Studios, Inc. v. City of Miami Beach, 491 F.2d 98, 100 (5th Cir. 1974). Moreover, where the legal landscape has undergone a recent and significant shift, see Shelby County v. Holder, 133 S. Ct. 2612 (2013), and the United States presents a vital perspective, see, e.g., U.S. Statement of Interest (ECF No. 630); U.S. Br. as Amicus Curiae, Perry v. Perez, No. 11-713, 2011 WL 6851350 (U.S. Dec. 28, 2011), intervention as a full party is warranted. For these reasons—and for the reasons that follow—this Court should grant permissive intervention pursuant to Rule 24(b)(2)(A) or Rule 24(b)(1)(B). In accordance with Rule 24(c), a proposed complaint in intervention is attached hereto as Exhibit 1.

I. Background

In defending the judicial preclearance action filed by the State of Texas under Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act, 42 U.S.C. § 1973c, the United States took the position that the State failed to establish that its 2011 Congressional and State House redistricting plans were not adopted with a discriminatory purpose. See U.S. Post-Trial Br., Texas v. United States, No. 1:11-cv-1303 (D.D.C. Feb. 6, 2012) (ECF No. 203) (Ex. 2). In Texas v. United States, 887 F. Supp. 2d 133 (D.D.C. 2012) (three-judge court), vacated, 133 S. Ct. 2885 (2013), a three-judge panel of the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia denied the State's request for a declaratory judgment granting preclearance of these plans. The D.C. court unanimously concluded that Texas had not met its burden of showing an absence of discriminatory purpose when it enacted the 2011 Congressional plan. See id. at 159-62. Moreover, despite denying preclearance for the 2011 State House plan based only on the State's failure to prove an absence of retrogressive effect, the D.C. court catalogued substantial "record evidence" suggesting a discriminatory purpose underlying that plan as well. See id. at 177. After entry of judgment, Texas appealed the denial of preclearance to the U.S. Supreme Court. See Notice of Appeal, Texas v. United States, No. 1:11-cv-1303 (D.D.C. Aug. 31, 2012) (ECF No. 234) (Ex. 3).

On June 25, 2013, while Texas's appeal remained pending, the U.S. Supreme Court announced its decision in Shelby County v. Holder, 133 S. Ct. 2612 (2013). In Shelby County, the Supreme Court held that it is unconstitutional to use the coverage formula in Section 4(b) of the Voting Rights Act, 42 U.S.C. § 1973b(b), as reauthorized by the Voting Rights Act Reauthorization and Amendments Act of 2006, "as a basis for subjecting jurisdictions to preclearance" under Section 5 of the Act. 133 S. Ct. at 2631. On June 27, the Supreme Court entered an order vacating the judgment of the D.C. court and remanding for further consideration in light of Shelby County and "the suggestion of mootness" made in a filing concerning the 2011 plans. Texas v. United States, 133 S. Ct. 2885 (2013).

Pursuant to this Court's July 1, 2013 Order, several groups of plaintiffs and plaintiff-intervenors in this case filed advisories on July 22, 2013, stating that relief pursuant to Section 3(c) of the Voting Rights Act, 42 U.S.C. § 1973a(c), would be an appropriate means to remedy intentional discrimination in the 2011 statewide redistricting plans and to protect voters "from the pattern of discriminatory actions persistently taken by the State." Pl. Joint Advisory at 2-3 (ECF No. 788); see also MALC Advisory (ECF No. 787); TLRTF Br. (ECF No. 823). The State of Texas filed an advisory in opposition. See Def. Br. (ECF No. 824). On July 25, the United States filed a statement of interest in this Court explaining the function of Section 3(c) and taking the position that Section 3(c) relief is warranted in this case. See Statement of Interest (ECF No. 827). The United States averred that the evidence presented in Texas v. United States proves that the 2011 Congressional and State House plans are intentionally discriminatory, regardless of which party bears the burden of proof. On August 5, the State filed a response that offered a radically different construction of Section 3(c). See Def. Response (ECF No. 842). In light of this new stage of proceedings, the United States now seeks to intervene as a plaintiff in this litigation.¹

II. This Court Should Permit the United States to Intervene Under Rule 24(b)(2)(A).

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 24(b)(2)(A) establishes: “On timely application the court may permit a federal or state governmental officer or agency to intervene if a party’s claim or defense is based on a statute or executive order administered by the officer or agency.” See also Miami Health Studios, 491 F.2d at 100 (holding that intervention is particularly favored when a government entity seeks to address a statute it is charged to enforce); Nuesse v. Camp, 385 F.2d 694, 706 (D.C. Cir. 1967) (“Permissive intervention is available when . . . an aspect of the public interest with which [a public official] is officially concerned is involved in the litigation.”). “In exercising its discretion, the court must consider whether the intervention will unduly delay or prejudice the adjudication of the original parties’ rights.” Fed. R. Civ. P. 24(b)(3). Thus, a proposed governmental intervenor must meet four requirements:

Rule 24(b) requires a proposed intervenor to (1) file a timely motion, (2) be a federal or state governmental officer or agency, (3) administer the statute, executive order, or regulation at issue, and (4) not cause undue delay or prejudice to the original parties’ rights, if allowed to (permissively) intervene.

Coffey v. Comm’r, 663 F.3d 947, 951 (8th Cir. 2011); see also City of Canton v. Nissan N. Am., Inc., 870 F. Supp. 2d 430, 436 & n.12 (S.D. Miss. 2012) (noting intervention by the Mississippi

Attorney General as chief legal officer for the state). The United States meets each of these requirements.²

The instant motion to intervene is timely. The Fifth Circuit has identified four factors to consider in evaluating whether a motion to intervene is timely:

(1) the length of time the intervenor knew or should have known of his interest in the case; (2) prejudice to the existing parties resulting from the intervenor's failure to apply for intervention sooner; (3) prejudice to the intervenor if his application for intervention is denied; and (4) the existence of unusual circumstances.

Trans Chem. Ltd. v. China Nat'l Machinery Imp. & Exp. Corp., 332 F.3d 815, 822 (5th Cir. 2003); see also John Doe No. One v. Glickman, 256 F.3d 371, 376 (5th Cir. 2001) ("These factors are a framework and not a formula for determining timeliness." (internal citations and quotation marks omitted)); Sierra Club v. Espy, 18 F.3d 1202, 1205 (5th Cir. 1994) ("The analysis is contextual; absolute measures of timeliness should be ignored."). The United States' interest in this litigation concerning the 2011 plans going forward lies in the application of Section 3(c). Prior to the decision in Shelby County, there was no need for an application of Section 3(c) because the State of Texas was covered by Section 5. This request comes less than two months after the decision in Shelby County and less than three weeks after the parties completed their briefing regarding the application of Section 3(c) to this case. Intervention by the United States will not cause undue delay or prejudice to the original parties' rights, as this litigation has entered a distinct new phase. This Court has not made any substantive determinations regarding the effect of Section 3(c) on this litigation or rendered a final judgment

² The Fifth Circuit has held that "there is no Article III requirement that intervenors have standing in a pending case." Newby v. Enron Corp., 443 F.3d 416, 422 (5th Cir. 2006). But see, e.g., Fund for Animals, Inc. v. Norton, 322 F.3d 728, 732-33 (D.C. Cir. 2003). Even if standing were required for intervention, the United States would meet the requirement. See 42 U.S.C. §1973j(d).

on the legality of the 2011 plans. Cf. United States v. Allegheny-Ludlum Indus., Inc., 517 F.2d 826, 846 (5th Cir. 1975). The United States does not seek to relitigate the trial that has already been conducted. On the other hand, the United States will be prejudiced if it is not granted full party status, as the United States would seek to present evidence in any evidentiary hearing conducted pursuant to a request for Section 3(c) relief. Because of the Attorney General's lead role in the D.C. litigation, the participation of the United States will assist the Court in deciding the factual issues in this case. Finally, the decision in Shelby County must be considered an unusual circumstance, as it has fundamentally changed the nature of litigation that was previously divided between two separate fora. See, e.g., Op. at 2 (ECF No. 690). This Court had no reason to consider Section 3(c) issues when Texas was subject to Section 5 through the coverage formula in Section 4(b) of the Voting Rights Act. See Sierra Club v. Espy, 18 F.3d 1202, 1206 (5th Cir. 1994) (discussing unusual circumstances).

The United States also meets the remaining requirements for intervention. The United States falls within the scope of government officers and agencies who may intervene under Rule 24(b)(2), as governments in their entirety may intervene under the provision. See Coffey, 663 F.3d at 951; Appleton v. Comm'r, 430 Fed. App'x 135 (3d Cir. 2011). In addition the United States—and specifically the Attorney General, through whom this litigation is brought—is charged by statute with enforcing the Voting Rights Act, see 42 U.S.C. § 1973j(d), and is assigned administrative responsibilities under Section 3(c), see id. § 1973a(c). The Supreme Court has recognized that the Attorney General has a “central role . . . in formulating and implementing” Section 5 of the Voting Rights Act. Lopez v. Monterey Cnty., 525 U.S. 266, 281 (1999) (alteration in original) (internal quotation marks and citation omitted). The Attorney General maintains an analogous role in the implementation of Section 3(c). See 28 C.F.R. § 51.8

(extending Section 5 regulations to review of voting changes under Section 3(c)). Finally—for the reasons set out above concerning timeliness—intervention by the United States will not cause undue delay or prejudice to the original parties’ rights. This Court should grant permissive intervention under Rule 24(b)(2)(A).

III. In the Alternative, the United States Should Be Permitted to Intervene Under Rule 24(b)(1)(B).

Permissive intervention is also warranted under Rule 24(b)(1)(B). That Rule permits intervention on a timely motion of anyone who “has a claim or defense that shares with the main action a common question of law or fact.” This requirement is subject to a liberal construction. See Stallworth v. Monsanto Co., 558 F.2d 257, 269 (5th Cir. 1977). As this action has demonstrated, courts have routinely permitted litigants raising claims similar to the initial plaintiffs to intervene in actions under the Voting Rights Act. See also, e.g., Terrazas v. Slagle, 789 F. Supp. 828 (W.D. Tex. 1991) (three-judge court), aff’d sub nom. Richards v. Terrazas, 505 U.S. 1214 (1992). For the reasons set out above, the instant request for permissive intervention is timely. See supra Part II. The only remaining requirement is the presence of a common question of law or fact between the existing claims and the issues raised by the United States in its proposed complaint in intervention.

The proposed complaint in intervention demonstrates the common questions of law and fact between the claims raised by the United States and those already at issue in this case. The United States asserts that the 2011 Congressional and State House plans were motivated by discriminatory intent. See U.S. Compl. ¶¶ 19-65 (Ex. 1). As a result, the United States contends that Section 3(c) relief is appropriate. See id. ¶¶ 66-68. Numerous plaintiffs also maintain intent-based claims against the 2011 plans. See, e.g., 3d Am. Compl. ¶¶ 21, 23 (ECF No. 53). Moreover, this Court has recognized that the application of Section 3(c) to this litigation is an outstanding question of law. See Order at 2 (ECF No. 772) (requesting briefing); see also Pl. Joint Advisory (ECF No. 788); MALC Advisory (ECF No. 787); TLRTF Br. (ECF No. 823); Def. Br. (ECF No. 824). Thus, permissive intervention should be granted, as it would “further the interests of justice, the rights of the parties, and efficient judicial administration.” New Orleans Pub. Serv., Inc. v. United Gas Pipe Line Co., 690 F.2d 1203, 1215 (5th Cir. 1982).

IV. Conclusion

For the reasons set out above, this Court should grant permissive intervention pursuant to Rule 24(b)(2)(A) or Rule 24(b)(1)(B). Pursuant to Local Rule 7(i), counsel for the United States has conferred with counsel for Plaintiffs, the State of Texas, and Intervenors. Plaintiffs and Plaintiff-Intervenors do not oppose the motion. The State of Texas is opposed to intervention by the United States.
